

Bringing the “Collective We” Together

One of the aspects of Water & Wine that we are most excited about is the diverse community we brought together to develop the content. The representatives from wineries, industry organizations, government agencies, consulting companies, and other organizations that attended the launch event at Peninsula Ridge showcased that dynamic community.

During the launch event, BLOOM conducted a number of interviews with attendees to discuss water's use and importance in Ontario's wine industry, and what can be accomplished by the “collective we”.

Making sustainable water use a reality in Ontario's wine industry.

“Seeing all these industry partners come together to really go towards the same goal which is improved water quality; it’s a win-win situation for everyone.”

– Kelly Jamieson
Niagara Peninsula Conservation Authority

There are processes that can be put in place in order to make your job of being sustainable easier and I think that’s what BLOOM really has brought to the table: change is not something we should be fear but something that is easily embraceable and that will be beneficial to us in the future.”

– Jamie Evans, Winemaker
Peninsula Ridge Estates Winery
